DIVISION OF BEHAVIORAL AND SOCIAL SCIENCES AND EDUCATION

The Committee on Law and Justice (CLAJ) is a standing committee of the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine. In 1975, it was established at the request of the Administrator, U.S. Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. For more than 40 years, CLAJ has attracted nationally and internationally renowned experts to provide independent advice to the nation on scientific issues pertinent to crime, law, and justice. The committee's work has led to new theoretical perspectives in both existing and under-developed areas of justice research and evaluation.

CLAJ's independent, expert reports and other scientific activities identify new areas of research, assist in resolving scientific controversies, extend the research agenda in established areas, promote theory development, and advance research-based policies. With the support of various sponsors, CLAJ accomplishes these tasks through consensus studies, workshops, symposia, and seminars on critical topics of interest to researchers, policy makers, practitioners, and the general public. Thoughtful planning and critical analysis by CLAJ account for the strong reputation that CLAJ enjoys among academics, government officials, policy makers, and practitioners. CLAJ projects are well designed and comprehensive in their scope and direction and highly relevant to key stakeholder communities.
