National Academies Seminar

Teaching the Social and Behavioral Sciences in K-12 Education: Past, Present, Future

17 November 2016

The American Anthropological Association

- DC-based
- 10,000 members
  - 20% are outside the US
  - 25% employed outside academy in private, govt, and non-profit sectors
- 22 journals in our publishing portfolio
- Research conferences
- Professional development support
- Education Initiative

Why teach anthropology in K-12?

- Good for students
- Good for anthropology
- Good for the social and behavioral sciences in general

Current public awareness?

- In our field, the public imagination is shaped by stereotypes in popular culture
  - the swashbuckler (Indiana Jones)
  - the crime solver (CSI / Bones)
  - the fascination with the exotic (Euphoria)
- Level of awareness is generally quite low
- "What is Anthropology?" Video

What does the teaching of Anthropology in K-12 look like?

- IB comes the closest, but it is not for every institution or for every student
- Our focus has been in the “informal learning” environments, especially museums, which serve as a supplemental classroom resource

Practical teaching issues

- Alignment with curriculum objectives
  - biology
  - social studies
  - world history
  - literature
- Qualified teachers
- Grade-appropriate learning materials

Potential for integrating into science education

C3 core concepts

- What It Means to be Human: Unity and Diversity
- Methods and Ethics of Inquiry
- Becoming a Person: Processes, Practices, and Consequences
- Global and Local: Societies, Environments, and Globalization

Potential for integrating into science education

- Our Public Education Initiative, which began with the Race Project, is now expanding to include the “World on the Move: 100,000 years of human mobility.”
- Anthropology Day activities
- Compile best practices in International Baccalaureate and high school programs
- Expand our Anthropology Guide to include anthropologists in other institutions
- Planning an award to recognize excellence in teaching anthropology in secondary schools
